will be graduated December 9 from the Advanced Management Program (AMP) of the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration as a member of the "golden" 50th AMP Class.

The graduation will follow a special day-long symposium December 8, on "The Changing Patterns of Executive Leadership," celebrating the completion of 50 sessions of the world's oldest and largest university executive development program and featuring some of the nation's top business leaders. James E. Webb, administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, will be the principal speaker at the graduation exercises.

The 50th AMP Class is composed of 160 executives from 135 companies in the United States and abroad, as well as from the military services and other government agencies. They come from 31 of the United States and the District of Columbia and 15 foreign countries representing every continent.

The 13-week-long program, designed to provide mature executives with an over-view of business administration and prepare them for the broad responsibilities of core management, was started in 1943, pioneering a development that is now world-wide in scope. The AMP program numbers nearly 6,000 alumni and includes nearly 2,500 men in the top-most positions in business and government in this country and overseas. Among them are 460 company presidents and chairmen of the board; 228 division or executive vice presidents; 1,089 staff or functional vice presidents; 332 general managers; 135 treasurers or controllers; 116 general or flag rank officers in the military services, including the commanding general of American forces in Viet Nam; three publishers; three deans of institutions of higher learning, and one ambassador.
